Jannette Ramos is proud to serve as the Councilwoman for Camden's 4th Ward. Before joining City Council, she worked for over 20 years as a social worker, helping families facing tough challenges like homelessness and addiction. She earned her Master's in Social Work from Rutgers University–Camden and started a nonprofit called It Takes a Village Housing, which helps women in recovery and their young children find safe housing and support.

Councilwoman Ramos is passionate about clean neighborhoods, safe housing, and better health for all. She launched the Bulk Waste Collection Initiative to fight illegal dumping and make Camden cleaner. She also serves on the Planning Board and has been on the CamCare Health Board for over 21 years.

As a mother of two sons, she is proud to give back to the city that raised her. In her free time, she enjoys dancing, working out, and connecting with her community.
