Nohemi G. Soria-Pérez is proud to serve as a Councilwoman At-Large in Camden, helping families across the city. She was elected in 2021 and became the first Mexican-American to serve on Camden City Council. Before joining the council, she worked with local nonprofits and now serves as Chief of Staff for state lawmakers, helping connect people with important resources.

She grew up in Camden and went to public schools, including Creative Arts High School. She earned her college degree from Lincoln University and studied in Spain. Inspired by her parents, who came to Camden as farm workers, she works hard to make sure every family has a voice.

Councilwoman Soria-Pérez is passionate about housing, education, and helping young people succeed. She also serves on several boards and enjoys mentoring youth, supporting community events, and singing classical music. Her biggest joy is being a mom and giving back to the city she loves.
